Elizabeth Daniel Vasquez is the Director of the Science & Surveillance Project at Brooklyn Defender Services in Brooklyn. In that role, Elizabeth is responsible for developing BDS's litigation and advocacy strategy surrounding issues of data, science, and technology. She consults on cases involving complex forensic science and surveillance issues, trains the office in litigating and confronting forensic evidence and emerging surveillance techniques, spearheads affirmative impact litigation emanating from forensic and surveillance abuses, and coordinates policy and law reform efforts surrounding emerging forensic science and surveillance concerns. Elizabeth has served as a faculty member for the National Forensic Science College, an adjunct professor at Cardozo Law School, and a trainer and panelist at numerous local and national convenings on forensic science and surveillance issues. Before joining BDS, Elizabeth worked as a staff attorney in the trial division of the Public Defender Service ("PDS") for the District of Columbia and an associate at Neufeld Scheck & Brustin, LLP, litigating wrongful conviction and civil rights cases in state and federal courts throughout the country.
